WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12. 1735. N°. 117.

Continuation of the Proceedings of the Dyet of Poland.

ON the 24th M. Poninski said, at the Opening of the Session, 'That tho' it was proper 'that, in Deliberations of 'such a Nature as those be- 'fore them, the Advance- 'ment of the Publick Good 'should be the chief Con- 'cern, yet it very often hap- 'pened that specious Plea served as a Cloak only for Self-interest and private Views; that therefore the Deputies ought not to suffer themselves to be imposed upon by such a Pretence, but rather to proceed without more Resistance to the Choice of a Marshal.' M. Dunin, the Deputy for Owiczin, declared, That as the Baron de Keyserling, the Plenipotentiary of Russia, had given him Satisfaction as to the Grievances which he had mentioned to him, he could no longer oppose the Election of a Marshal; but wished, on the contrary, that they might proceed to it forthwith, and that the Chamber of Deputies might enter upon Business. The Deputies who had insisted upon the previous Departure of the Troops, began again to canvass that Matter. The others objected, That it was absolutely necessary that the End of assembling the Dyet should be answer'd, and that, after they had provided for the Security of the Royal Family, and for the Maintenance of the Liberty of the Subject, and after they had agreed on the Departure of the foreign Troops, they might then put off the Consideration of the other Affairs depending, to another Time, and in the mean while adjourn the Dyet; which gave Occasion to a Motion in the Chamber of Deputies to adjourn the Dyet or prorogue it. Upon this M. Poninski represented to the Deputies, That they might remember that the Reign of the late King furnished a Precedent of such a Prorogation of the Dyet, and that therefore there was no Reason to hesitate about it now. But the Deputies of Lencicia immediately protested against this Motion, and insisted on the Necessity of making those Alterations first, that were demanded in the Act of Evacuation. M. Poninski assured them, that the King would be so good as to give them a more positive Declaration as to the Departure of the Troops, when once they had elected a Marshal. But this Assurance was of no Effect. M. Nackwawski, the Deputy of Wisogrod, said, He had heard from good Hands, that the Powers engaged in the War, were actually about concluding a Peace, and that, by consequence, the King having now no more Disturbance to fear, might, from this Instant, send away the foreign Troops. M. Poninski made Answer, 'That as the 'foreign Powers had no Manner of Dependence on 'the Polish Nation, so the Republick of Poland being 'not subject to any foreign Power, ought singly to 'take Care of the Re-establishment of their own Tran- 'quillity, without staying for any Treaties forming 'among other Princes.' But this Representation availed as little as the rest; and, at the Desire of the Deputies, the Director adjourned the Session to next Day.

On the 25th M. Poninski made new Attempts to prevail with the Deputies to come to a final Determination for chusing a Marshal. He added, that there were but five Days left for the Chamber of Deputies, by such Election, to join the Senate; and that, if there was no hopes of bringing the Dyet to a Capacity for acting, it would be indispensibly necessary for the King and the Well-affected to think in Time of other Methods of promoting their Country's Welfare.

It was to be hoped that the important News which the King notified to the Primate and other Grandees two Days ago, of the Preliminaries for Peace settled betwixt the Emperor and France, whereby King Stanislaus was to renounce his Pretension to the Crown of Poland, would have made some Impressions upon the opposing Deputies, and would have determined them to consent to the Choice of a Marshal, in order to proceed with the necessary Zeal on Methods for retrieving the Affairs of the Republick, and restoring the Kingdom to as flourishing a State as ever. And the better to prevail with the Deputies, the Senate deputed some of its Members to them on the 26th, to convince them of the Necessity of the said Election, especially in the present Juncture, which promised such a favourable Issue to the Deliberations of the Dyet. —— But neither this Deputation, nor the News of the above-mentioned Accommodation, had the Effect that was expected; for the Deputies in the Opposition insisted still upon the effectual Evacuation of the foreign Troops in the first Place, and some of them said, that if such Preliminaries as had been laid before them, were actually agreed to, the said Troops ought not to make the least Difficulty of departing the Kingdom forthwith. In fine, the opposing Deputies have declared, that in case the 3 following Articles are granted them, they will join in the Election of a Marshal. 1. That a certain Day be fixed for the Departure of the foreign Troops. 2. That there be a Regulation as to the Manner of their Departure, and that it be specified in particular, that the respective Territories shall not be obliged to the Expence of furnishing them with Provisions, Forage, &c. 3. That the Republick shall not be engaged in any particular Treaty with Russia, especially in case that the latter should enter into a War with the Ottoman Porte.

Thus stood Affairs on the 26th, when M. Poninski opened the Dyet by an Exhortation to the Deputies to make the most of the little Time that they had left for Business; and he again asked the Opponents, Whether or no they were willing that the Dyet should have a prosperous Issue? The Deputy of Cujavia answered in the Name of his Party, That they wished it heartily; but that it was not possible for them to depart from their first Resolution. Upon this M. Karawowski, the Deputy of Podlachia, took Occasion to say, 'That since they 'plainly perceived, that their Deliberations were only 'retarded by private Views relative to the Disposal of 'the vacant Offices, it would be necessary to remove 'that Impediment by an Address to the King, that he 'would be pleased to dispose of such Offices in favour 'of Persons of Merit, considering, that by a Resolution 'in the Dyet of Convocation, it was agreed to leave to 'the King who should be elected, the Disposal of both 'the civil and military Employments, even tho' the 'Dyet called by such Prince, had not its Effect.' This Motion was approved of by the Generality of the Deputies, but rejected by seven or eight of the opposite Party. And the Deputy of Plock seconding the Deputy of Podlachia's Motion with some Warmth, there arose such a Tumult in the Assembly, that it took up above an Hour's Time to pacify it; and M. Poninski, to prevent the fatal Consequences of the Animosities which appeared in that Session, was obliged to adjourn it to next Day.

On the 27th M. Poninski represented to the House, 'That, if the Dyet miscarried, the Deputies would be 'the greatest Sufferers by it; but that the King would 'be no Loser, except in the Hopes founded on his 'tender Concern for the Welfare of his Subjects; and 'that therefore they ought to consider, that it was for 'their own Advantage to proceed forthwith to the 'Election of a Marshal.' M. Glembowsky, the Deputy for Cujavia, was against this Opinion, and said, Have we not Reason to apprehend, that the foreign Troops will never be gone, since so many Objections are made to the Alterations demanded in the Act of Evacuation? The Generality of the well-affected Deputies observed, that this was a far-fetch'd Insinuation, thrown out on purpose to retard the Proceedings of the House. They also renewed the Proposition that was made in the last Session, and added, that as the Opponents thought themselves justified to insist on the Alterations they had demanded in the Act of Evacuation, before the Chamber was qualified to enter upon Business, so they thought themselves authorized, on their Part, to demand, that they should proceed to the Disposal of Offices. While this Matter was contesting, a Deputation came to the House from the King, which consisted of the Bishop of Plosko, the Castellan of Trock, and the Palatine of Czernihovia, all three Senators of the Kingdom. These spoke one after the other, and exhorted the Deputies, in the most pathetick and eloquent Terms, to unite and concur for a speedy Restoration of the Tranquillity of the Kingdom. M. Poninski returned them Answer in the Name of the House, and thanked them for the paternal Care which the King continued to manifest for the Welfare of his Subjects; and he said upon that Occasion, that he hoped his Majesty's Deputation would be attended with good Success; and with the same Hopes the Senators took their Leave: But they were soon frustrated by the inflexible Attachment of the Gentlemen in the Opposition to their first Opinion: And the Director thereupon adjourned the Session to the 29th, because the 28th was the Festival of St. Simon.

On the 29th M. Poninski repeated his most pathetick Exhortations to engage the Deputies to give the first Proof of their Disposition to Concord, by proceeding to the Choice of a Marshal, since on that depended the Departure of the foreign Forces, and the Satisfaction of their other Demands. The Opponents, as much averse to Conviction as ever, renewed all their Demands at once; and there was such a Noise in the House, that a Deputy of the contrary Party rising up to speak, was obliged to ask Leave first; but all the Deputies of the Court Party opposed the demanding of such Permission, and would not suffer any Voting, unless it was for the Choice of a Marshal. Thus, by a mutual Opposition, both Sides were hindered from making the least Motion. Upon which the Opponents of the Court desired the Director to adjourn the Session; which he did accordingly to the 31st (with that pathetick Lamentation of the unhappy Circumstances of the Republick mentioned in our last Paper.)

On the 31st the Deputies who opposed the Choice of a Marshal, declared, 'That they were resolved not to 'put up with wavering Promises and uncertain Assur- 'ances; and that if, after the Solicitations which they 'had made for the Departure of the Russian and Saxon 'Troops, they were still refused that Satisfaction in 'that Article, they should be obliged to retire before 'the Time for Separation of the Dyet, and to protest 'against a Refusal so contrary to the Liberties of the 'Nation, &c.'

The Deputy of Plock, one of the Court Party, demanded Leave to speak: But the Opponents, by way of Reprisal, because they were not suffered to vote for any Question, unless it was for the Choice of a Marshal, and declared, that since, but two Days ago, they were refused that Liberty, they would act in the same Manner, and suffer nobody to speak. The Director Poninski again bewailed the sad Situation of the Chamber of Deputies, and said, That he was sorry to see them relapsed into the same Disease that they labour'd under the Day before. Then he observed to the Opposing Deputies, 'That tho' in former Reigns there were 'Disputes of the same Nature about Foreign Troops, 'yet they were at last happily accommodated: That in 'the Reign of King Stephen, the Dyet was first of all 'obliged to provide for the Security of that Prince be- 'fore he sent his Hungarian Troops out of Poland: 'That the same thing happened in the Reign of King 'Sigismund, with regard to the Departure of the 'Swedish Troops: That of this they had a more 'recent Instance in the Reign of the late King; and 'that consequently the Polish Nation could not do 'better than to follow the Example of their Ancestors.' He concluded, by exhorting the Deputies to take off that Injunction which they had laid themselves under of Silence. The Deputies that had been hinder'd from speaking in the Session of the 29th, declared, That as Satisfaction had been made to their Honour, by hindering others from speaking as well as themselves, they would not stop the Course of Proceedings in the next Session, and they desired M. Poninski to adjourn the Session, which he did accordingly to the next Day but one, after having recommended the Prosperity of the Republick in a very affecting Manner, to the Care of the Divine Providence.
